The University of Michigan’s first Islamic manuscript—a small nineteenth-century Koran (later numbered as Michigan Islamic Manuscript 837)—arrived in its collections in 1914, the gift of David Emil Heineman.1

No overt agenda for the acquisition of Islamic manuscripts existed at the University of Michigan before 1924. William Warner Bishop, University Librarian, discussing the library’s needs in a memorandum submitted to President M. L. Burton in 1923, had noted that the university’s holdings were weak in Orientalia, particularly in the Arabic language.2

In the 1920s the University of Michigan’s manuscript collecting activities were particularly focused on the acquisition of Greek and Coptic manuscripts. The individual primarily responsible for this was Francis Willey Kelsey, professor of classics at the university. At this period manuscripts were being acquired in large lots from various dealers in antiquities, who encouraged peasants working in their fields or digging for fertilizer in archaeological sites in the countryside to bring them anything of interest that was found. In Cairo one of Kelsey’s main contacts for the purchase of old manuscripts was Maurice Nahman,3 cashier at the Crédit Foncier Égyptien (a bank specializing in the loaning of money on Egyptian improved real estate). Nahman’s antiquities business was an important sideline to his work at the bank, which brought him into contact with people from all over the country who might have access to antiquities. Kelsey had been introduced to Nahman by Charles L. Freer of Detroit, whose collection of Oriental art was to become the nucleus of the Freer Collection in Washington, D.C. Nahman had also made purchases for J. Pierpont Morgan and seems to have been well acquainted with Pierre Lacau, then director of the Egyptian Museum in Cairo.4 Kelsey had worked with Nahman both independently and in cooperation with the British Museum for several years already when a letter arrived from Nahman dated 23 November 1923 announcing Nahman’s recent acquisition of an important collection of Islamic manuscripts from the private collection of the deposed Sultan Abdülhamid II of Turkey.

From Nahman’s letters and Kelsey’s memoranda it is possible to reconstruct the story of this collection of manuscripts as it made its way out of Turkey and into Nahman’s possession. De Marinis, a well-known antiquities dealer from Florence who had bought many Italian manuscripts for J. Pierpont Morgan, was authorized by Morgan to go to Constantinople after the Young Turk revolution in 1912 for the purpose of acquiring any valuable manuscripts that might be being sold out of the estates of the country’s former rulers. De Marinis, acting, as he believed, on Morgan’s authority and promise to pay, brought a large number of manuscripts out of Turkey, but when he came to Rome to present them to Morgan the American millionaire was found to be in the last stages of his final illness and unwilling to give any consideration to the purchase. De Marinis had paid £12,000 Turkish for the collection, and had hoped to get £40,000 sterling for it from Morgan. According to De Marinis, the collection consisted mostly of Korans and was not of much value.5

When Morgan died without paying De Marinis, the latter tried to recoup his investment by offering the collection to the Egyptian government. Lord Kitchener, then High Commissioner (1911-1914), found the price too steep and refused the purchase. The collection returned to Italy, but was sent again to Egypt in 1920 in the care of a Mr. Sherman. After three months of negotiations, the Egyptian government proposed to purchase some one hundred volumes out of the total of 470. Mr. Sherman wanted to keep the collection together; in the end it was sold in its entirety to Maurice Nahman, who was now asking Kelsey £6,500 Egyptian for it.6 His letter to Kelsey describes the collection in some detail

1 Mr. Heineman (1865-1935), a University of Michigan alumnus who became a prominent Detroit lawyer and politician, had personal interests in Detroit Jewish history and the collecting of rare books. He made several gifts of books to the University of Michigan in the early years of this century. His personal papers are held in the Bentley Library, University of Michigan. As designer of the flag of the City of Detroit, a brief biographical note on Heineman appears in Gibson’s Artists of Early Michigan (Detroit, 1975), p. 127.

2University of Michigan, Bentley Library, Francis Willey Kelsey, Correspondence, 1894-1924, box 1, folder “Correspondence, May 1924,” “Manuscripts and Papyri, W. W. Bishop to President M. L. Burton and the Advisory Committee, Near East Research,” 28 May 1924.

3Information about Nahman that follows in this paragraph is derived from a 9 February 1924 letter from Kelsey to W. W. Bishop, University of Michigan, Bentley Library, Michigan—University—Library—Papers, 1837-1957, box 17, folder “Kelsey, F. W. 1923-25.”

4Nahman’s familiarity with Lacau is briefly alluded to in Kelsey’s Memorandum No. 4, ”May 16 to July 31, 1924,” found in University of Michigan Special Collections administrative files, drawer labeled “Kelsey Material/Sanders’ Papers,” file box labeled “Kelsey Memoranda,” envelope labeled “Memoranda 1-4 March 20, 1924 to July 31, 1924.”

5The account to this point is based on Kelsey’s Memorandum No. 9, ”October 16-31, 1924,” found in University of Michigan Special Collections administrative files, drawer labeled “Kelsey Material/Sanders’ Papers,” file box labeled “Kelsey Memoranda,” envelope labeled “Memoranda 9-13 October 16, 1924 to June 5, 1925.”

6The account to this point is based on two sources: a note in French handwritten on ledger paper and signed by Nahman (?), in University of Michigan Special Collections administrative files, drawer labeled “Ancient & Medieval Manuscripts – Individual,” hanging file labeled ”Islamic Manuscripts;” folder labeled “Acquisition;” and Bentley Library, Michigan–University–Library–Papers, with regard to physical characteristics, subject matter, and age. He also mentions the interest of other major buyers, including the Egyptian Royal Library (now the National Library or Dar al-Kutub), in purchasing all or part of the collection. For unspecified reasons Nahman preferred to let Michigan have first crack at the collection.

Kelsey seems to have debated for about a month before responding to Nahman’s letter. In the meantime he set about trying to find a buyer for the collection, in the hopes of encouraging Nahman’s interest in the purchase of papyri for Michigan. He contacted the younger J. P. Morgan, whose librarian favored the purchase. Kelsey telegraphed Nahman on 3 January: “CONSIDERING PURCHASE ABDUL COLLECTION.” Shortly thereafter, however, Kelsey learned that Morgan did not plan to pursue the purchase as he was just about to turn his library over to trusteeship and did not think it wise to open a new department at that time. Kelsey then approached Yale University’s President Angell about purchasing the collection for that institution, and wrote Nahman on 26 January to the effect that he was trying to help Nahman find a buyer for the collection. But Yale was unable to secure the necessary funds for the purchase. On 8 February Kelsey wrote Nahman that Michigan was not able to acquire the collection, but that he hadn’t given up hope of finding a U.S. buyer. In reply Nahman shot a letter back to Kelsey, dated 26 February, reiterating his conviction that the strong interest of other buyers indicated the value of the collection and his certainty that what he was offering to Michigan was a bargain:

I stopped with everybody to deal about this matter and I prefer to expect your order. I think if you must buy manuscript by manuscript, you will spend a fortune, and some manuscripts will never be found today on the market. I have been, dear Professor, always straight with you and sincere and my opinion is clear and without interest. I will be proud to sell my collection to Michigan University and one day you will be very glad to have got it.

At the end of March 1924 Kelsey traveled to London to discuss further cooperative purchases of papyri with the British Museum and to encourage its purchase, in cooperation with a prominent book collector, of the group of Islamic manuscripts which were now coming to be referred to as the Abdul Hamid collection. Kelsey communicated by telegram with A. Chester Beatty, whose enormous personal collection of Oriental manuscripts has been available to scholars in the library named after him in Dublin, and secured a commitment from Chester Beatty to join in the expenses “and if examination proves satisfactory to purchase at least one-half or more” of the collection. The Trustees of the British Museum authorized the expenses of Mr. Edward Edwards, head of the BM’s department of Oriental Printed Books and Manuscripts, to travel to Cairo to examine the Abdul Hamid collection. By May 9, both Kelsey and Edwards were in Cairo; while Kelsey spent about ten days arranging the details of upcoming University of Michigan archaeological digs in Egypt, Edwards spent a week working on the manuscripts. His evaluation of their value and significance was favorable, so much so, in fact, that Kelsey was moved to consider seriously that the University of Michigan should have a share in this unique opportunity.

Kelsey arranged to meet Bishop in Milan to discuss this new idea. Bishop was sufficiently convinced to write on 28 May 1924 to President Burton and the Committee on Near East Research recommending prompt action:

7According to F. W. Kelsey to M. Nahman, letter 9 January 1924 (apparently never sent! and superseded by Kelsey to Nahman 26 January 1924), Bentley Library, Francis Willey Kelsey, Correspondence, 1894-1924, box 1, folder, "Correspondence, January 1924."
8Kelsey to Nahman, 26 January 1924, in Bentley Library, Francis Willey Kelsey, Correspondence, 1894-1924, box 1, folder, "Correspondence, January 1924."
9Kelsey to Nahman, 8 February 1924, in Bentley Library, Francis Willey Kelsey, Correspondence, 1894-1924, box 1, folder, "Correspondence, February 1924."
10As a result of these negotiations Kelsey sent back the first of what was to become a series of fourteen massive memoranda to the University of Michigan Committee on Near East Research. These memoranda, in combination with Kelsey’s and Bishop’s correspondence files, supply much detail about Kelsey’s many and various negotiations and activities on behalf of the university.

16Kelsey to Burton, 13 June 1924, in Bentley Library, Francis Willey Kelsey, Correspondence, 1894-1924, box 1, folder, "Correspondence, June 1924."
"For some months I have known that the private collection of Persian, Turkish, and Arabic manuscripts formerly the property of the Sultan Abdul Hamid was in the hands of a Cairo banker, the same man from whom we have bought so many papyri in recent years. In fact, I have urged the Yale University Library to buy this collection, adding it to the already large holdings of Arabic manuscripts now in its possession. The collection is not only magnificent—it is probably the only considerable collection of the sort whose genuineness is unquestioned. We are offered an opportunity to purchase this collection in cooperation with the British Museum and Mr. Beatty of London, the parts of greater scholarly interest falling to the University, those of greater art interest to the two other parties.

"My feeling is that the time is ripe to extend our holdings in this field, and this is probably the sole chance we shall have. The President will recall that in a memorandum on the needs of the University Library submitted to him some months since I specifically pointed out our weakness in the field of Orientalia, particularly in Arabic. It is not at all generally realized how great is the amount of publication annually in the Arabic language or how large and important are the books and manuscript collections in this and kindred fields in European libraries. We at Michigan have barely made a beginning in this direction—and I can assure the Committee that its apparent remoteness from our present interests is far more apparent than real. We shall wake up presently to our need of instruction and books in Semitics (other than Hebrew), but we shall never have another chance to get 300 genuine Persian, Arabic, and Turkish manuscripts, in part calligraphic or illuminated. These things are already being "faked" in large numbers. Mr. Edwards of the British Museum assures us these are genuine. I know from my own experience that genuine manuscripts of this sort have practically disappeared from European markets.

"We have, through the wise generosity of the Regents and of friends of the University, made extensive purchases of papyri and Greek manuscripts in recent years. I find my European colleagues keenly alive to what Michigan has done in this field. The venerable former librarian of the Vatican, Cardinal Ehrle, when I called on him recently, commended in no uncertain terms our wisdom in thus securing material for scholarly publication while it could be had. He said it was America's opportunity arising out of the post-war poverty of Europe, and he hoped we would continue to use it in a large and enlightened way. I have no hesitation, then, in urging the Committee to take favorable action on this project, to vote a request to the Regents for an appropriation to pay a portion of the purchase price, and to endeavor to raise the residue from the friends of the University. And I have no question that the manuscripts, if acquired, will be at once sought out by competent scholars, and not merely kept for exhibition.

"As Regent Clements has frequently said to me, it is by taking advantage of such opportunities as they occur that great libraries are built up. This is a typical opportunity."

b. Letter, Warner G. Rice (Director, General Library, U of M) to Mr. Richard Ford of Detroit, 20 July 1951. In the letter Rice acknowledges receipt of a 16 July note from Ford which included a copy of a letter obtained by Ford from G. M. Meredith-Owens, Brit. Mus. Dept. of Oriental Printed Books and Manuscripts, presumably authenticating (and describing?) the work in hand. Ford’s letter may have asked what research institutions in the United States might be interested in acquiring the text. Rice writes: "There are several research institutions in the Unites States which have made som especial attempts to collect materials on and about the Near East. Among these I suppose the most distinguished is Princeton, though a good deal has been done at the University of Chicago also. At the University of Michigan we have specialized for a long time in Coptic materials, but we are now extending our interests, especially through the activities of Professor Cameron, who has recently become head of our Department of Near Eastern Languages…. The General Library is now making rather extensive purchases of materials in Turkish, Persian, and Arabic. Last fall we acquired a large collection of such materials and shall doubtless continue to build in this field. I can assure you that if you were to offer the Arabic manuscript which Mr. Owens describes to the University of Michigan we should be very glad indeed to have it.”

Guldastah : manuscript, [1820 or 1].
1 v.: col. ill.; 32 cm.
Contents: Historical miscellanies in Persian, mainly relating to southern India. Inserted paper slips describe contents specifically:
"A note on the Copernican theory that the Earth & the other planets revolve round the Sun."
"A list of the Muhammadan rulers of northern India.” Accompanying illustration shows Indian ruler with an English king or governor.
"A sketch of the history of the Marhatta kingdom to the time of Baji Rao."
"Plan of a fort (apparently at Daulatabad)."
"Portrait of Sultan Abu 'l-Hasan Shah, the last king of Golconda, who died A.D. 1700."
"Statement concerning the revenues of the Subahs of the Deccan."
"Plan of Hyderabad."
"Account of Asaf-Jah."
"Geographical notes on Europe."
"Notes on England."
"On the Pope and his relations with England."
"A summary of English history (little more than a list of kings) to the time of Richard I.”

Rice is probably referring here to the acquisition of the Heyworth-Dunne collection.
Date: Acc. to Storey (I have been unable to verify).
Physical description: Text rubricated and enclosed in red borders; color illustrations, some seem to have been cut from another text and pasted in. Binding: brown leather (much degenerated) and marble paper.
Accompanying materials:

a. Letter, from C. A. Storey at the India Office, Whitehall, London, to Mr. Turner, 4 January 1927:
"The title of the Persian book which you left with me some time ago is Guldastah (i.e. The Nosegay) and the author Ray Govinda Rama Rao. It was completed at Masulipatan in the year 1236 of the Muhamadan era (=1820-1 A.D.). As you will see from the slips which I have inserted at a number of points, the contents are miscellaneous, but the greater part of the book consists of extremely brief historical summaries relating mainly to Southern India. The pictures of course have little artistic value and the work itself is unimportant. Such things have no fixed market value, and it is always difficult to estimate what they will fetch, but I do not think it would be possible to sell this manuscript for more than £1 (one pound) and it might even be difficult to find any one who would give so much.
"I must apologize for keeping the manuscript so long.
"Yours sincerely
"C.A. Storey"

b. Letter, from "Ernest [Turner?]" at the India Office to "Alice," 5-1-27:
"I have at last got the promised report on your Persian book and send it herewith. It is evidently not a treasure, but the Map of the World near the beginning is rather fascinating, as it seems to omit Europe Asia Africa America and most other places."

c. Slip of paper stamped "Rare Book Room/Stephen Spaulding Memorial" and inscribed in pencil: SS-4077/Edwards cat 784:198/£5

d. Two cards with writing of Emilie Savage-Smith: "Personal family tree/Moghul (NW India/illus. fine late 18th c./go thru & remove paper slips w/ ID" and "SS Isl. Ms. shelved on VB,1"

c. Copy of letter, Frank J. Schulte of Grand Rapids, to Dr. Howard H. Peckham, Clements Library, U of M, 13 November 1976:

"During a two-year period (1962-64) I was a member of the Public Administration Service team in Kabul, Afghanistan. It was my good fortune to acquire, among other art objects, two illuminated manuscripts: one, small, exquisitely written on parchment [in margin at this point: "paper/HCJ"], the other a larger leather-bound book. According to Dr. Gruening, attached to the German Embassy in Kabul, the first is dated 1921 and was dedicated to a governor of Herat. Dr. Gruening estimated that the book's cover is, perhaps, 200 to 250 years old. (I wonder what vandalism was perpetrated to acquire the cover for the 1921 book). The larger book is inferior quality-wise but has a large number of water-color illustrations. The date of this book has been obliterated but might be determined by the use of infra-red light. It has been much used, perhaps by children, as one page shows some doodling.

"At the time Dr. Gruening examined these books he was in charge of a large exhibit of Oriental illuminated manuscripts from the Tuebingen, Germany, collection which had been brought to Kabul as part of the Afghan celebration of Jeshyn, the national independence week.

"I have enjoyed the possession of these treasures for a long time now and, should your library want them, will be delighted to donate them. If you do want them, perhaps someone from the university who might have reason to be in Grand Rapids, will contact me." Further correspondence in Spec. Colls. admin. files shows that someone visited Mr. Schulte, obtained the two books, and they were deposited in Special Collections on 29 November 1976.
d. Copy of note on legal paper signed "HCJ": "Correspondence attached. Mr. Eilts looked at them soon after they arrived but he was unable to catalog them. The accession number is a problem as there are lots of unaccessioned Islamic MSS in the collection. Accession numbers are usually chronological by date of receipt. Do we put these two before MSS that have been here twenty and more years? Obviously the latter cannot all be cataloged & accessioned now. Or do we assign temporary accession numbers for purposes of shelving? A big project--hence never done."
